(AP Photo/Charles Rex Arbogast) WASHINGTON (AP) — In a career as long as human lifespan, James Heckman built his reputation as the world's leading expert on improving the quality of young children's lives. He created a widely used experimental incentive program to help young blacks earn more college degrees and take jobs that would help them earn higher wages. Those more college-educated workers were, in turn, more likely to marry, have children and participate in anti-poverty programs like Medicaid and food stamps. ADVERTISEMENT "The near-universal belief of the body of scientific evidence is that superior children's outcomes are realized for the society when their parents are relatively well educated," Heckman says. "So, if you're raising children, you're like a surgeon. You only have one chance to get it right." Now, at the age of 74, Heckman is having a well-deserved moment in the sun, as he is the recipient of the 2017 Lasker Clinical Medical Research Award. The Lasker Awards recognize lifetime achievement in the field of medical research. For the second time, Heckman is honored for his research and accomplishments through the Medical Research Institute of Chicago (M2C), a nonprofit organization he founded. A series of grants and public service investments have supported Heckman and M2C. In 2016, the philanthropist and financier Rex Sinquefeld funded a study to test how effective the ba244e880a
