When I think of the amount of work it takes to become a published author, I sit in awe of the characters that must have went through the same ordeal. I mean, if the writer can't even finish a manuscript then I'm definitely not interested in reading a book by him/her. The work is such a burden even on an already overwrought woman. All the hours of work I've done before, whether writing, editing, rewriting, submitting and finally the waiting for the wait to be over, it takes a toll on one's sanity. How do these people manage to write a manuscript that's perfect, and why do people insist that writing is so difficult? Once you've done all the work and finally you've waited long enough for the final product to be published, what's next? Not another book, I hope. But several. And another. And another. And perhaps a non fiction book and a book in your speciality. But let's face it, writing is not a one-stop shop. It requires patience, persistence, hope and stubbornness to maintain a balanced life. Therefore, I am going to take a much needed break from writing and writing is going
