Gonadal mosaicism for a sex-determining gene mutation in the domestic fowl. Mutations affecting the sex-determining genes (Z and W) of chickens have been shown to segregate in populations of chickens and in lines of domestic fowl. In the present study, a mutation at a putative sex-determining locus was recovered in eight lines of domesticated fowl. The mutation was maternally inherited and appeared to have been segregating for 2-3 years. This mutation did not change the position of the W locus as shown by the production of sex-reversed chickens and their apparently normal W-allele dosage on the affected Y-chromosomes. It was therefore concluded that this mutation resulted in the production of all-female chickens. The mutation was not a chromosome rearrangement and the mutation could not be localized to a particular chromosome. Although the mutation was expressed in a number of chromosomal backgrounds, the mutation was only apparently expressed when the fowls were in a chromosomal background which had a relatively reduced production of mature testes.using System.Collections.Generic; using System.Data.SqlClient; using System.Dynamic; using System.Linq; namespace SqlStreamStore.Samples { public static class QueryResult { public static void RunExample(Action query) { Console.WriteLine("SqlStream

He watched with a rapt expression as he stepped into his black-and-red shoes. He wondered what his older brother was thinking. "How would you help me?" "You're not going?" "I've got a job. It's crazy, but the people here are so full of themselves. This will be good for me." "How's that? You're doing this for the money?" Jack saw the look on his brother's face. "For the attention. For you. For a chance to be seen. Do I have to spell it out? I can't live on that money any more. This is my last shot, my last chance. I'm tired of waiting, of being the only one who can buy clothes or who can eat in restaurants or who has a decent car or even a decent house. I just want to be treated like everybody else. I've been that way since we were kids. I don't want to live like this anymore." He didn't care if he saw Jack's face when he said that. It was the truth. Jack wasn't going. Jack was going home to their mother. That's all he could think
