Cerebral and cerebellar magnetic resonance (MR) imaging in patients with Wilson's disease is reviewed to determine its pattern of signal abnormality. In this retrospective study, patients who had been diagnosed as having Wilson's disease were reviewed. The examinations were reviewed for the presence and severity of the degree of brain stem atrophy, cortical atrophy, and cerebellar atrophy. Of 17 patients with Wilson's disease, 12 patients had documented brain stem atrophy, 8 patients had cortical atrophy, and 7 patients had cerebellar atrophy. Brain stem and cortical atrophy appeared to correlate in the majority of patients. Patients with severe cortical and brain stem atrophy had more severe clinical findings. Cerebellar atrophy may be related to systemic complications of the disease. We conclude that brain stem and cortical atrophy are the main MRI findings in patients with Wilson's disease. Cerebellar atrophy is a secondary finding in severe cases of the disease.
