Category:Windows games Category:Windows-only games Category:Windows-only freewareAs reported by The BBC last week, there are plans to build a "superhub" on the former Olympic park in east London, which will be packed with up to five million square feet of office space, including the Tech City UK offices, along with an entertainment quarter, a hotel, and residential space. But after experiencing some pretty heavy traffic on the underground while travelling to the news, I can see why many are worried the government plans will be gridlocked and not fit for purpose. There have been many stories about London's planning problems over the past few years – from Google's plans to build a 23-acre campus on the Olympic park to the biggest stadium in Britain, and the massive residential estate called Elephant and Castle that's seen its population almost double in just five years. As this new development is in East London, it has been dubbed the "new Tech City" by some, and the Mayor's team want it to be a "global technology hub", but there are plenty of people who are concerned about the scale of it all and whether we will end up with a "London congestion charge"-style commute. It's easy to blame the Mayor, but the government has also had a big hand in creating these problems by not acting on its own programmes for the regeneration of the east of the city – London's most deprived borough – and for not making the right kind of long-term planning decisions for the area. Crowded Tube When Google first announced plans to move to the Olympic Park in 2009, it was estimated that 2d92ce491b
