how to start a great novel A: Write a "make believe" story, in English. Write the story only in the first and second person.

Prologue: "I live in the US and I have been planning a trip to Sri Lanka." "I have been reading about Sri Lanka in the past few weeks. I want to go to the country of my ancestors." "I want to know more about this country. I want to go there and explore." "I will fly to Sri Lanka in three months." "I am excited." I live in the US and I have been planning a trip to Sri Lanka I have been reading about Sri Lanka in the past few weeks. I want to go to the country of my ancestors I want to know more about this country. I want to go there and explore I will fly to Sri Lanka in three months I am excited Write a few lines like this to introduce the protagonist. In the second person is hard for me to use. I understand why that is You write something like this I live in the US and I have been planning a trip to Sri Lanka Try to write in the first person like this I live in the United States and I am planning on going to Sri Lanka. Then you will have to rework it like this I'm going to Sri Lanka in August. I've been reading about the country in the past few weeks and I'd like to go there and explore. I want to know more about the place. From there you can go on and make it your own. Things to keep in mind As others have said, the first scene you should keep simple. Don't have a main character and do too much. An improved method for studying the membrane binding of proteins has been developed. Liposomes have been used to which are associated both radioiodinated proteins and amphipathic molecules, such as lysolecithin. The ability to distinguish between different types of binding has been studied by means of gel filtration on Sephadex G-25. These studies suggest that a significant fraction of the membrane
