An additional facial island flap, which can be designed without recipient vessels, might be a useful method of reconstruction. The aim of this study was to evaluate the clinical outcomes of facial reconstruction using a submental island flap. Eight consecutive patients underwent reconstruction using a submental island flap between February 2004 and June 2006. The indications for using a submental island flap were a large facial defect after tumor excision (n=4), a facial defect after trauma (n=2), and a facial defect after carcinoma ablation (n=2). The area of the facial defect ranged from 5 x 4 cm to 10 x 7 cm. The size of the flap ranged from 8 x 5 cm to 14 x 9 cm. All of the submental island flaps survived completely. No venous congestion or flap necrosis was observed. All of the patients were satisfied with the aesthetic results of their facial reconstruction jdbc:oracle:thin:@server:port:sid Here, port was defined as one of the local ports, as below: hostname -n tnsnames.ora

*LOCALHOST:PORT This worked for a while. Now we are able to connect but only with readonly access. If we try to write a query we get the below error:

com.sun.jdbc.odbc.JdbcOdbcException: Sqlca: Invalid host name: SID. Now, if we use the same connection string as above, but with the sid as the hostname like below: jdbc:oracle:thin:@sid:port:sid Then we get the following exception:

com.sun.jdbc.odbc.JdbcOdbcException: Insufficient access privileges for the specified database: ssid. Has anything changed in the way JDBC driver connects to Oracle 11g? Has it gone from localhost or do we need to do something special to get readonly access? A: I had a similar issue. The "hostname" in my tns file was actually defined as a password. I changed it to my hostname with my hostname -n and that resolved the issue. Sanctuary (disambiguation) A sanctuary is a place of religious or spiritual safety.
