The first film from the Indian director J. B. Chandrashekar's (Papanasam) wide-ranging career. It is about the lives of a happy couple, Hema and Saaman, who want to be parents. This is a serious attempt at a happy ending for which the director risks the hard-hearted verdict of a censor board bent on crushing sentiment, so it is hardly surprising that Astitva is one of the longest Indian films ever released. Astitva (meaning The Name in Hindi) is a drama set in the contemporary life of India. It is the story of Hema (played by Poonam Dhillon), a young woman who comes to Bombay, and falls in love with Saaman (played by Ashish Vidyarthi), a distant relative, who is a successful writer in the UK. Hema is very happy with her first pregnancy, which means a new lease of life for her as well as a new chance to marry Saaman, whom she loves very much. . The film also starred Ashish Vidyarthi, who went on to have a long career in Bollywood, and early in his career had roles in several major Hindi films such as Abhishek, Sajan Re Jhoot Mat Bolo, and Dil Chahta Hai. The film was not released in India until 2004, when it became the first film in Hindi cinema to be given a PG rating by the censor board. A new version was made after lengthy negotiations with the censor board, which allowed the film to be given an NC-17 rating, and was released on 28 November 2004. In 2012, four years after the film was banned again, the film was finally given a PG rating. After Astitva, Chandrashekar directed several other films that were successful, including Padosi and more importantly, the Chori Chori series. However, he continued to write scripts, many of which were successful, including such films as Dil Bole Hadippa and Pehchaan. Meny More Audio and Video Formates With Hd And Full Hd.
