Nicolette Theopolis is a South African bank customer and wrote about the experience on Facebook. She said that last Friday she visited the Standard Bank's Westville branch to withdraw money for her children. After completing the transaction, she had to pay a fee. "The teller next to me was asking for my ID, when she got the phone call on her phone, she just walked out and didn't say anything." She later discovered the text message from the teller. It read: "Hello you. I have a lovely, lovely girl for you. I want you to fuck me. She is 18yrs and her name is Nikki." The teller did not return the Daily Maverick's calls. The message was discovered by Standard Bank's parent company Nedbank. In an emailed statement, Nedbank said: "The matter was immediately reported to the police who are investigating the matter." It has since promised to have the matter investigated "thoroughly". A consumer advocate has called on Standard Bank and Nedbank to release a public apology. "It is clear that the messages were disrespectful and racist but those responsible need to acknowledge it and make an apology, especially given the history of racial slurs at the bank," said Kagiso Lediga, a former South African activist, and chairman of the SANAC Consumer Advocacy Centre. "The two banks that control the Standard Bank brand in SA have a responsibility to show leadership in this matter." Developmental and metabolic control of the sterol regulatory element-binding proteins in vivo. Sterol regulatory element-binding proteins (SREBPs) mediate the transcriptional regulation of a family of genes encoding the enzymes that produce cholesterol and fatty acids. These enzymes are crucial to the regulation of cell growth, and SREBPs are crucial for the proper regulation of these processes. In this report, we have created mouse strains that express
