pinhole formation. The occlusive dressings may be used as part of a therapy involving a drug, such as a corticosteroid or anti-inflammatory drug to aid healing, or they may be used simply to protect and prevent contamination of the ulcerated area. It is well known that the wound healing process is a complex interaction between the body

for. Q: Clarification needed in the definition of amenable of action Let Γ be a group and X a Γ -set; we will say that Γ is amenable (or X is amenable) iff there exists a Γ -equivariant map $f: X \rightarrow B\Gamma$ where $B\Gamma$ is the classifying space of Γ . Let Γ be a countable group, and X an infinite cardinal number. We say that Γ is amenable iff X is amenable. Both of these definitions are in A book I am studying. Both definitions are different from the definition I usually find: a group

Γ is amenable iff Γ acts on some subspace Y of the Hilbert space ℓ_2 by continuous transformations and Y admits an invariant mean. My question is, what the difference between these two definitions of amenability? Does the usual definition imply one of those definitions? A: The first definition is using amenability of X and some compactness property for $B \backslash \Gamma$, whereas the second one is using the fact that if X is any infinite cardinal number then there is a Γ -set with X as a cardinality. The first one is usually called "amenable as a Γ -space" and "amenable as a measure-preserving Γ -space" and it is studied in the context of group cohomology. The point is that if Γ has a fixed point in X than the diagonal action of Γ on $X \times X$ is transitive and one sees that this is exactly a measure-preserving action. The result you mention requires amenability of X . It is also possible to define amenability in this case as the existence of a diagonal action, but the compactness assumption is rather weird, and 3e33713323
