Ripley's five tribes of myths is a 200 p. pdf of the five tribes of Native American myths popularized by William James, with an introduction. The role of transport in the adaptive response to dietary protein restriction. It is evident from both clinical and epidemiological studies that dietary intake of protein and amino acids may be critical to health and longevity. The apparent importance of amino acids was first demonstrated by the observation that the dietary restriction of protein in mice resulted in a pronounced increase in longevity and resistance to a number of age-related diseases. This has been subsequently confirmed in numerous nutritional intervention studies, but the actual molecular target of dietary protein restriction is still poorly understood. It is becoming increasingly clear that dietary protein restriction can modulate specific nutrient sensing pathways resulting in an adaptive response in mammalian cells. The current review will focus on the key pathways and genes that are altered during the adaptive response and their links to clinical studies of dietary protein restriction. The evidence linking these molecular changes to the health improvements observed in dietary intervention studies will be discussed.
