ZOTAC has a name for its graphics cards featuring a modest design, and the company says that this year is no different. On Tuesday, the company unveiled the ZOTAC AMP UHD, an extreme-overclock-friendly solution which will be available soon in North America. "For those who want the best overclocking solution available today, we have a new product that will exceed even those high expectations: ZOTAC AMP UHD," said Raimundas Malokas, ZOTAC General Manager. "Overclocking is where ZOTAC has been for a few years now, and we're also where we want to be, as a leader in this field." The ZOTAC AMP UHD (Ultimate Overclocker) series of graphics cards will feature a triple-fan-blower design with a 250 W TDP, a factory overclock of up to 1,300 MHz and liquid cooler support. ZOTAC says that this is the "highest-performance card to date from a company of [the] ZOTAC AMP Series' stature." The top performance model will be ZOTAC's Apex R9 290X, and will set you back a hefty $999, but if you're a gamer who's willing to drop a few hundred to get the benefits of a factory overclock, a ZOTAC AMP UHD will fit the bill. The cards will also be available in two flavors: a six-pin- and eight-pin-out versions. Both cards support up to four displays, and feature six DisplayPort 1.2 outputs, three DisplayPort 1.1 outputs and one HDMI 2.
