What's the difference between bad design and evil design? - ajaimk ===== Aron "Evil" in this case is a semantics problem. Evil doesn't inherently mean bad/wrong any more than death would necessarily be an immediate cause of grief. ~~~ cdr There's a difference in (for example) the first-order ramifications for the world as compared to the second. Its a similar situation in the design of the UI. Some UIs are bad, some are evil, and they both look the same. ~~~ ekm2 Actually, The UI is evil. It has no "natural" way of dealing with non-system data and it has none of the ability to be customized. ~~~ ajaimk I'm not sure I understand. The UI should be as extensible as the app itself. It should allow the end user to extend the user experience. It's great to create a front-end framework that is flexible and extensible but I would really rather use a framework that works specifically for me. I'm the one who starts with the app and that's how I want to end it. Q: Graph algorithm complexity I was wondering about this wiki page It states that for a 2-coloring of a bipartite graph, any maximum matching is 648931e174

On July 3, 2010, the Finance section of The Times ofÂ .Q: PHP exec with system returns weird file I'm trying to execute exec from within my PHP application and get weird results. Here is a code snippet:

```
$output = exec('system", "find', $directory);
$filecount = count($output);
$file_lines = array();
foreach($output as $line) { $file_lines[] = array_shift($line); }
echo implode(" ", $file_lines);

 Now, given directory '/home/root/files/test', the $output yields: find: unknown: No such file or directory find: -exec: No such file or directory find: -exec: No such file
